Month in Cash: Light at the end of the tunnel

September 1, 2013

In a month that saw continued albeit choppy economic improvement, the most significant news in August from the money market's perspective emanated from an event that actually occurred in July. That's when Federal Reserve policymakers wrapped up their latest meeting, the minutes of which weren't released until August 21. Notable in the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) comments were two things: committee members appeared wedded to finalizing a framework for ending quantitative easing (QE) when they next meet on September 17-18, with a tapering of the $85 billion in monthly Treasury and agency mortgage-backed securities (MBS) purchases likely starting in October. Secondly, and more significantly from our viewpoint, the minutes indicated policymakers expect to use overnight reverse repos to help manage the Fed's exit from its extraordinary monetary accommodation of the past five years.

What does this mean for savers and money fund investors? After living with extremely low interest rates since 2008, some relief may loom on the not-too-distant horizon. To be sure, events between now and the September meeting could forestall immediate movement by the FOMC. Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke et al have made clear that whatever decisions they make will be driven by the data, the bulk of which so far is suggesting the economy is strong enough to stand on its own. It hasn't been great, mind you. Manufacturing and employment haven't picked up as much as many were expecting, housing has hit a bit of a speed bump as higher mortgage rates appear to have made some potential buyers squeamish and there always are geopolitical tensions, the latest being Syria. Still, with housing off the floor, unemployment trending down and the consumer pretty well situated, the Fed appears set to act sooner rather than later.

How much and how fast the Fed pulls back remains debatable. It will come in two phases, the first of which is to get rid of QE. Earlier this summer, when the economic outlook was brighter and the market perhaps a little too optimistic, we anticipated this may be wrapped up by year's end or so, with the Fed culling purchases $15 billion to $20 billion a month in the fall. Now, with the outlook a little murkier, it's possible the Fed will take a more gradual approach, i.e., a monthly drawdown closer to $10 billion to $15 billion, delaying QE's demise until the end of next year's first quarter if not a bit beyond. Either way doesn't matter that much to the money markets, given that as soon as the Fed begins to exit from the Treasury and MBS markets, supply should rise, helping lift yields across the curve.

The second phase—the reduction of the roughly $3 trillion the Fed has added to its balance sheet since launching unprecedented easing—won't likely come until phase one

Definition of Weighted Average Maturity (1) & (2)

*(1) "WAM Days" is the mean average of the periods of time remaining until the securities held in TexPool (a) are scheduled to be repaid, (b) would be repaid upon a demand by TexPool, or (c) are scheduled to have their interest rate readjusted to reflect current market rates. Securities with adjustable rates payable upon demand are treated as maturing on the earlier of the two dates set forth in (b) and (c) if their scheduled maturity is 397 days or less; and the later of the two dates set forth in (b) and (c) if their scheduled maturity is more than 397 days. The mean is weighted based on the percentage of the amortized cost of the portfolio invested in each period.

*(2) "WAM Days" is calculated in the same manner as the described in footnote 1, but is based solely on the periods of time remaining until the securities held in TexPool (a) are scheduled to be repaid or (b) would be repaid upon a demand by TexPool, without reference to when interest rates of securities within TexPool are scheduled to be readjusted.

Definition of Average Monthly Yield (3)

*(3) This current yield for TexPool Prime for each date may reflect a waiver of some portion or all of each of the management fees.
