Month in Cash: Second Guessing the Fed

July 1, 2013

Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke's delivery of his opening statement as the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) wrapped up its two-day meeting on June 19 did not flow as smoothly as his past post-FOMC presentations, giving a sense he might not have been fully on board with the language he was asked to read. The statement was, however, a representation of sentiment across the policy-setting committee. It was also in line with what we've been saying for some time—while it's not being reflected in inflationary levels, keeping rates this low for so long is dangerous, and in light of the progress we've seen in the economic recovery this year, tapering of quantitative easing measures is likely to start in the second half of 2013. It's important to note, as Bernanke did in his press conference, that tapering of QE does not amount to tightening of monetary policy—it's just reduced easing. Further, the Fed cutting back on purchases of Treasury bonds and mortgage-backed securities is not slamming on the brakes, it's more like easing off the accelerator. The strategy can be adjusted, or even reversed, if economic data starts turning downward again.

Despite a steady stream of indications over the past few months that the Fed was heading down this path, many were taken aback by the Fed chairman's openness. Nobody likes surprises, and ripple effects spread quickly across all sectors of the markets. Luckily, the upheaval being seen in the bond markets hasn't played through to the money market yield curve. Rates at the short end have suffered by just a couple basis points, with the London interbank offered rates (Libor) curve steepening out one to three basis points in some places—minor effects compared with what is happening in the ten-year range of the bond market.

The scramble in the markets to react, and even overreact, to the Fed's moves also presented a buying opportunity. Federal funds futures had for some time been pricing in adjustments to the federal funds rate to take place somewhere around the beginning of 2015, but during the past month, those futures contracts have slid forward, toward an anticipated mid-late 2014 adjustment to rates. The opportunity comes because that move might not be warranted—Bernanke made it clear that QE and the federal funds rate are two different issues, and a change to the actual target rate was still "far in the future." In the period since the FOMC statement and Bernanke's press conference, two separate Fed officials have stepped forward to warn that these moves were out of line with the Fed's thinking.

Definition of Weighted Average Maturity (1) & (2)

*(1) "WAM Days" is the mean average of the periods of time remaining until the securities held in TexPool (a) are scheduled to be repaid, (b) would be repaid upon a demand by TexPool, or (c) are scheduled to have their interest rate readjusted to reflect current market rates. Securities with adjustable rates payable upon demand are treated as maturing on the earlier of the two dates set forth in (b) and (c) if their scheduled maturity is 397 days or less; and the later of the two dates set forth in (b) and (c) if their scheduled maturity is more than 397 days. The mean is weighted based on the percentage of the amortized cost of the portfolio invested in each period.

*(2) "WAM Days" is calculated in the same manner as the described in footnote 1, but is based solely on the periods of time remaining until the securities held in TexPool (a) are scheduled to be repaid or (b) would be repaid upon a demand by TexPool, without reference to when interest rates of securities within TexPool are scheduled to be readjusted.

Definition of Average Monthly Yield (3)

*(3) This current yield for TexPool Prime for each date may reflect a waiver of some portion or all of each of the management fees.
